

A KÁROLI GÁSPÁR REFORMÁTUS EGYETEM HITTUDOMÁNYI KARA

Rövid ismertető:

This lecture examines Augustine of Hippo's world-historical sermons on the Roman trial of Jesus, in his Homilies on the Gospel of John. "Pilate was a Roman", he says, "and the Romans sent him to Judaea as governor." As this suggests, for the illustrious African bishop, the sentence under which Jesus died is a Roman sentence. The passion is legally, for Augustine – unlike for many patristic commentators – a Roman affair. On Augustine's reading, Jesus is arrested by Romans, and it is a "Roman judge" (iudex Romanus) who sentences him to death. In contrast to much of the Christian tradition, Augustine accepts that it is the Roman imperium that most brutally tortures, condemns, and kills Jesus. Augustine's insistence on Pilate's guilt has a long political legacy in medieval and early modern Europe – in a word, this political legacy is the concept of the 'secular'.
